DOD directs employees to start wearing face masks again

C. Todd Lopez
DOD News

Following guidance issued by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, the Defense Department has directed employees working in areas at high risk for transmission to begin using face masks again as a measure to prevent the continued spread of the COVID-19 virus, especially the fast-moving, highly-transmittable Delta variant.

The new guidance for the department came in a memorandum signed by Deputy Defense Secretary Kathleen H. Hicks.

"In areas of substantial or high community transmission, DOD requires all service members, federal employees, onsite contractor employees and visitors, regardless of vaccination status, to wear a mask in an indoor setting in installations and other facilities owned, leased or otherwise controlled by DOD," the memorandum read.

The memo also says that those who have not been vaccinated will need to continue to wear masks, as they have been required to do all along.

DOD installations are also being asked to post signage and update their websites to let visitors know of mask policies in place at those locations.

CDC guidance issued July 27 recommends that even individuals who have been vaccinated against COVID-19 start wearing a mask again while indoors if they are in an area of "substantial or high transmission."

"To maximize protection from the Delta variant and prevent possibly spreading it to others, wear a mask indoors in public if you are in an area of substantial or high transmission," the CDC recommends.

Information about areas of the country that are most at risk for transmission can be found on the CDC website.

"I wake up every day and I'm glad to be alive."

"After getting busted for possession of meth on June 24, 2015, my life has changed dramatically. I've gone from spending most of my time high, or trying to get high, to now passing every single drug test, working at a local animal shelter, and going to AA/NA meetings daily. My mental and physical health are better and most of my relationships have improved. My personal finances have also untangled. I wake up every day and I'm glad to be alive, when I once used to pray that I would die before I went to bed. Each day gets a little better. The pretrial diversion program probably saved my life. As crazy as it may sound, I'm grateful that I got arrested or I doubt that I would be alive today."

GRADUATION

The guest speaker providing these graduates with advice and words of wisdom was Col. Jeremy Bergin, 14th Flying Training Wing vice commander.

Bergin is a seasoned pilot, who for the past 20 years has been at an Air Force Special Operations Command, and has served in every major named operation since 1994.

"SUPT is a trial of knowledge and skill and hard work," said Bergin. "Every day these young aviators are shaped into what will be the profession that will serve them for the rest of their careers."

Primary training takes approximately 23 weeks and includes 254.4 hours of ground training, 27.3 hours in the flight simulator and 89 hours in the T-6A aircraft.

After primary training, students select, by order of merit, advanced training in the fighter-bomber or airlift-tanker track. Both tracks are designed to best train pilots for successful transition to their follow-on aircraft and mission.

Along with completing approx-

KEESLER AIR FORCE BASE, Miss. — Maj. Gen. Michele Edmondson took command of 2nd Air Force from Maj. Gen. Andrea Tullos during a change of command ceremony at the Bay Breeze Event Center here, July 30.

Lt. Gen. Brad Webb, commander of Air Education and Training Command, presided over the ceremony.

Second Air Force manages 2,300 active training courses for approximately 150,000 Defense Department and international student graduates annually.

Edmondson is now responsible for the development, oversight and direction of all operational aspects of basic military training, initial skills training and advanced technical training of all Air Force enlisted members and support officers.

Traditionally, the changing of command authority is represented symbolically by passing of the guidon.

Once Webb received the guidon from Tullos, he passed it to Edmondson. At that moment, Edmondson officially took command of 2nd Air Force.

“It is incredibly humbling to once again join the Second Air Force team,” Edmondson said. “I am passionate about our mission and it’s an honor to have the opportunity to be a part of an organization responsible for building the Airmen and Guardians we need to win the future fight.”

“I can’t imagine being anywhere else in the Air Force,” she said. “Keesler Air Force Base, on the Mississippi Gulf Coast, is such a fantastic place to live. We have been welcomed back in the community with open arms and it truly feels like coming home. My family and I are very excited.”

Prior to commanding the 2nd Air Force, Edmondson was the Commandant of Cadets at the U.S. Air Force Academy, commanding a 4,300 member cadet wing and more than 200 Air Force and civilian personnel.

“The men and women of 2nd Air Force have dedicated themselves to building and honing the human weapon system, which is the most vital ingredient in our Air Force and Space Force,” Edmondson said. “I am proud and honored to be their commander. I look forward to enabling their mission and serving alongside all of the outstanding Airmen, civilian Airmen and Guardians across our numbered Air Force.”

BLAZE Hangar Tails: A-10 Thunderbolt II

Mission

The A-10 Thunderbolt II has excellent maneuverability at low air speeds and altitude, and is a highly accurate and survivable weapons-delivery platform. The aircraft can loiter near battle areas for extended periods of time and operate in low ceiling and visibility conditions. The wide combat radius and short takeoff and landing capability permit operations in and out of locations near front lines. Using night vision goggles, A-10 pilots can conduct their missions during darkness.

Thunderbolt IIs have Night Vision Imaging Systems, or NVIS, goggle compatible single-seat cockpits forward of their wings and a large bubble canopy which provides pilots all-around vision. The pilots are protected by titanium armor that also protects parts of the flight-control system. The redundant primary structural sections allow the aircraft to enjoy better survivability during close air support than did previous aircraft. The aircraft can survive direct hits from armor-piercing and high explosive projectiles up to 23mm. Their self-sealing fuel cells are protected by internal and external foam. Manual systems back up their redundant hydraulic flight-control systems. This permits pilots to fly and land when hydraulic power is lost.

The A-10 has received many upgrades over the years. In 1978, the aircraft received the Pave Penny laser receiver pod, which sensed reflected laser radiation from a laser designator. Pave Penney has now been discontinued in favor more capable advanced targeting pods. The A-10 began receiving an inertial navigation system in 1980. Later, the Low-Altitude Safety and Targeting Enhancement (LASTE) upgrade provided computerized weapon-aiming equipment, an autopilot, and a ground-collision warning system. In 1999, aircraft began to receive Global Positioning System navigation systems and a new multi-function display. In 2005, the entire A-10 fleet began receiving the Precision Engagement upgrades that include an improved fire control system (FCS), electronic countermeasures (ECM), upgraded cockpit displays, the ability to deliver smart bombs, moving map display, hands on throttle and stick, digital stores management, LITENING and Sniper advanced targeting pod integration, situational awareness data link or SADL, variable message format, or VME, GPS-guided weapons, and upgraded DC power. The entire A-10 fleet has been Precision Engagement modified and now carries the A-10C designation.

The Thunderbolt II can be serviced and operated from austere bases with limited facilities near battle areas. Many of the aircraft’s parts are interchangeable left and right, including the engines, main landing gear and vertical stabilizers. Avionics equipment includes multi-band communications; Global Positioning System and inertial navigations systems; infrared and electronic countermeasures against air-to-air and air-to-surface threats. And, it has a heads-up display to display flight and weapons delivery information.

The Thunderbolt II can employ a wide variety of conventional munitions, including general purpose bombs, cluster bomb units, laser guided bombs, joint direct attack munitions or JDAM, wind corrected munitions dispenser or WCMD, AGM-65 Maverick and AIM-9 Sidewinder missiles, rockets, illumination flares, and the GAU-8/A 30mm cannon, capable of firing 3,900 rounds per minute to defeat a wide variety of targets including tanks.

14th Flying Training Wing Public Affairs

Columbus Air Force Base held a Chief Induction ceremony July 22, 2021, to recognize the achievements of Chief selectees Senior Master Sgt. Joi T. Washington 14th Force Support Squadron superintendent, and Senior Master Sgt. Melissa D. Bridges, 14th Operational Medical Readiness Squadron superintendent as they were inducted to the highest rank of the enlisted force: Chief Master Sergeant.

In 1958, Congress passed The Career Compensation Act, paving the way for the new ranks of E-8 and E-9. Only one percent of the enlisted force could serve in the pay grade of E-9. Chief Master Sergeants hold key leadership roles at all levels throughout the Air Force, often serving as command chiefs that advise the wing commander on issues affecting the force, and serve as commandants, functional career field managers and superintendents. The Chief Selects and their families met with the commander of the 14th Flying Training Wing, Col. Seth W. Graham, and the command chief, Chief Master Sgt. Antonio L. Cooper, for the traditional Medallion Ceremony before the Induction Ceremony.

“The Medallion Ceremony is a private event for the Chief Selects and their families. There are many versions but the purpose is the same,” said Cooper. “It signifies a rare milestone for our enlisted leaders but also outlines the expectations, roles and responsibilities that will be required from our future Chiefs.”

Bridges serves as the 14th Operational Medical Readiness Squadron superintendent on Columbus AFB. As superintendent she provides leadership and effective utilization and management to organize, equip and train 61 assigned personnel supporting the Columbus Air Force Base community and personnel medical needs. Bridges advises the squadron commander on matters concerning authorizations, assignments, personnel, morale and welfare. She is currently the 4N Functional Manager for the 14th Medical Group and is responsible for the medical development of 18 medics.

“You don’t have to be a chief to be a leader. If you have someone who is accountable, networks, sacrifices and has empathy, confidence, and emotional self-awareness, we use all of these things as a leader to recognize how we need to bring people with us,” said Bridges. “Holding people accountable and collaborating is how you build teams because we can’t do this job alone.”

Bridges entered the Air Force in January of 2002 and graduated from the Medical Services Technician course at Sheppard Air Force Base, Texas in July of the same year. She held many roles throughout her career to include supporting OPERATION FREEDOM’S SENTINEL and the NATO Resolute Support mission.

“Excellence is a standard and not an achievement,” said Bridges. “It lays the foundation for everything we do.”

Washington served as the 14th Force Support Squadron superintendent on Columbus Air Force Base. She was responsible for providing mission support through the Manpower and Personnel, Service Sustainment, Force Development, Airman and Family Services, Community Services, Honor Guard and Installation Personnel Readiness offices to over 3000 personnel and family members. Washington provided comments during her Permanent Change of Station to her new duty location.

“As a chief I want to further advance our inclusiveness,” said Washington. “Yes, we make great strides in our Air Force to be inclusive and have diversity, but I want that to have a bigger impact to where we’re not just doing it, it’s an automatic thing. We’re not making a conscious effort to do it, it just comes natural.”

Washington graduated from the Personnel Apprenticeship Course at Keesler Air Force Base, Mississippi and has since held numerous roles in personnel programs and policy in the numbered Air Force and squadrons assigned. She deployed in support of Operations: ENDURING FREEDOM, IRAQI FREEDOM, RESOLUTE SUPPORT and INHERENT RESOLVE.

“I want to leave behind great teams, and I know that sounds crazy but you’re not getting anywhere without each other,” said Washington. She also expressed the need for a teamwork mentality throughout a service member’s career in the Air Force. “We can’t build anything alone.”
